Spring Concert

MAY 9 – 2026

Warren Philharmonic Orchestra

Dr. Christopher Cicconi
Conductor and Music Director

Lakeview High School Auditorium
300 Hillman Drive, Cortland, Ohio

A Message from the Music Director

Dearest Friends,

I am thrilled to welcome you all to what is going to be a spectacular 2025 / 2026 Season of the Warren Philharmonic Orchestra. This year will be filled with exciting music that inspires, resonates, and invigorates! Most importantly, welcome to our community, we are so very glad that you are here.

As a native to Northeast Ohio, I have deep, family roots and am energized to 'come home' to make music with my dear friends and cherished colleagues.

As a young musician growing up in the valley and working in the Warren Steel Mill with my father, I have always been enthralled by the rich history of musical excellence that has been such an integral part of our heritage. In fact, the Warren Philharmonic was the first full orchestra that I performed with as an aspiring professional tuba player. The invaluable experience performing here set me on a journey to this very moment, a time in which I am ecstatic to give back to a community that nurtured my growth as a musician, conductor, and most importantly, a human being.

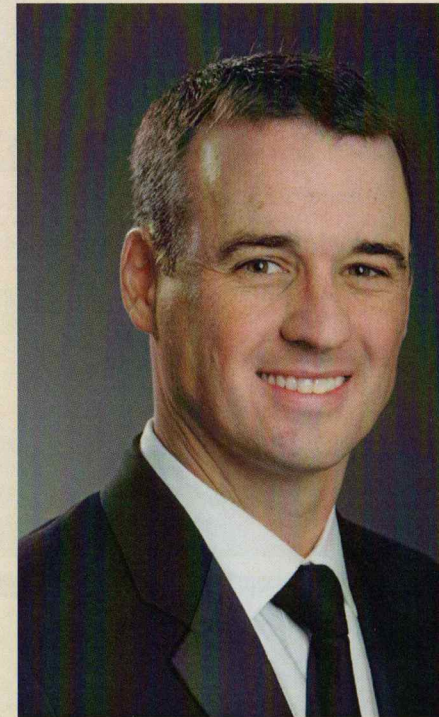

Each concert this year will follow an overarching theme that unifies as well as ties the music together. This concert will have it all and has been carefully constructed for your listening enjoyment.

Finally, this season is about all of us and the friendships we will build as we work to cultivate a genuine sense of belonging. We as the Warren Philharmonic Orchestra would like to wholeheartedly welcome you to our musical family. From myself, the board of directors, and all of the musicians, thank you for accompanying us on our musical journey and we hope very much that you enjoy the concert.

Sincerely,

Christopher M. Cicconi

Appalachian Spring Suite (for 13 instruments) (1944)

— AARON COPLAND

Dawn breaks on a farmhouse. One by one, instruments gather, offering messages of hope.

In 1942, Aaron Copland was asked for a new ballet score by the dancer and choreographer Martha Graham. Copland had watched Graham blaze a trail through 1920s New York. He'd seen her uncompromising physical language and understood its focus on the heaviness and intensity of the human body. Graham set Appalachian Spring in a Pennsylvania farmhouse, in the shadow of the Civil War. A couple is soon to be married. The wife-to-be is ambivalent, feeling joy and concern. There is tension as the couple clashes with a hellfire preacher.

Copland's music reflects the varied influences of Graham's story. Swing music, hymns, and folk-tinted melodies mingle, while the melody "Simple Gifts" reflects Copland's interest in the Shakers, an insulated Christian sect focused on community, work, and simplicity.

He later made a suite from the ballet. Included is the hope of the morning, dances of celebration, ecstasy of religious experience. Gone is the darkness of the ballet's second half: numbers like "Fear in the Night," "Day of Wrath," and "Moment of Crisis."

The work's title came from a Hart Crane poem, "The Dance." The poem is baffling, but the "Appalachian spring" seems to refer to a water source as well as the annual season. When Copland asked if the poem had anything to do with the ballet, Graham answered, "No, I just liked the title and I took it."

Concerto in A Major for Piano and Orchestra No. 23, KV 488

— WOLFGANG AMADEUS MOZART

This work dates from early 1786, when Mozart was in demand chiefly as a composer of vocal music – Le nozze di Figaro was taking shape at the same time. But the fickle Viennese public, which had three years earlier so lavishly acclaimed the piano concertos by the young virtuoso from Salzburg, was hardly clamoring for more. Mozart nevertheless went ahead with their composition, in the belief that he could seduce the public with his unquenchable ability to come up with something new and tantalizing.

Without question, there is something new in all three piano concertos he would produce even when his former patrons were seeking other musical sensations: the festive – and profound – Concerto in E-flat, K. 482; the dark, dramatic C minor, K. 491; and between those two giants, this lithe and gracious work in the key of A major, which it shares with the equally mellow Clarinet Concerto, his last instrumental composition. K. 488, like its two near contemporaries, was intended for Mozart's own performance and all three were probably first heard at Lenten season concerts in 1786. All remained unpublished at his death.

The A-major Piano Concerto replaces the bright-toned oboes usually found in Mozart's concertos with clarinets, for darker coloration, particularly in the passionate, richly chromatic slow movement in the rare key of F-sharp minor. But unlike K. 482 and K. 491, which likewise employ clarinets, there are no trumpets and drums here. The atmosphere remains intimate, with interchanges between the woodwinds – flute, clarinets, bassoons – heightening the chamber-music feeling of the first two movements; and while the rondo-finale may be a send-'em-home-smiling affair, it hardly lacks those passing touches of pathos without which Mozart simply wouldn't be Mozart.

K. 488 has all the characteristics of the work of a wise old master, giving the impression of having seen and heard everything and having no regrets. And in a sense Mozart was old, at the age of 30.

Symphony No. 6 in F Major
'Pastorale' Op. 68

— LUDWIG VAN BEETHOVEN

Beethoven did most of the work on his Symphony No. 6 during the time he was completing the Fifth Symphony—late 1807 into early 1808—and in many ways, it is a walk down the sunny side of the same street. Bright and relaxed where the Fifth is dark and driven, the Sixth is nonetheless just as miraculously voiced and almost as tightly constructed.

There were precedents for a programmatic “Pastoral” such as this, particularly Le Portrait musical de la nature, a symphony of five similarly titled movements composed in 1784 by the music director for the Stuttgart court, Justin Heinrich Knecht. Beethoven, however, indicated that his intentions were more “an expression of feeling than of description.”

Years later, Beethoven took his friend and often unreliable biographer Anton Schindler for a walk in the country outside Vienna. “Here it was that I composed the ‘Scene by the Brook’ and the yellow buntings overhead, the quails, the nightingales, and the cuckoos composed with me,” Beethoven said. In the instrumental cadenza at the close of the “Scene by the Brook,” Beethoven marks the birdsongs in the score—the nightingale is the flute, the quail is the oboe, and the two unison clarinets represent the cuckoo. The yellow bunting is not labeled, but Beethoven indicated to Schindler its more important fluttering figure, appearing first in the flute.

The brook itself rolls along gently in the middle strings, and there are numerous other points of explicit scene painting. The insouciantly untutored musicians in the “Merry Gathering of Country Folk” depict the house band of Croatian folk musicians of a tavern named At the Three Ravens. Musical storms became a Romantic cliché, though few hit with the impact of Beethoven's, despite the steady enlargement of both harmonic and instrumental palettes. Beethoven saves the timpani, trombones, and piccolo for this moment, as well as the minor side of the home key and unstable harmonies such as diminished chords.

So you can enjoy the day in Beethoven's countryside without feeling guilty that you are ignoring the finer points of the purely musical argument. The birdsongs are not merely illustrative detail but are musically pertinent as well, for example, and the mellow radiance of the finale cloaks the structure of a cogent sonata form. In Beethoven's “Pastoral” Symphony, appreciation of the lovingly detailed scenery and expressed feelings, as well as their abstract underpinnings, are one and the same, since Beethoven made them completely interactive. To notice a programmatic detail in this sonic country is also to observe a twist in the structural logic. Trust the feelings that Beethoven worked so hard to evoke.
